“I think it’s journalism at its grubbiest. The one thing about politicians is our families should be off limits,” Hughes slammed.

“I’ve got teenage children. I would never want them to go through something like this, it's just grubby, and I think Peter's right it's a matter for the family."

On the same program, Labor MP Daniel Mulino agreed that invading the privacy of politicians' families is a line "we don't cross".

"My arguments are with Peter Dutton's policies, and I won't go beyond that and comment on anything else," Mulino told the publication.

Unlike the Liberal leader before him, Dutton has kept his family relatively out of the spotlight, with a few notable exceptions.

In 2019 a fluff-piece was published to boost Dutton's image as a family man, in which his wife Kirilly Dutton said that her husband is "not a monster".

Marcus Abbott lost son of Tony Abbott is a monster, as he likes to 'Take Care of Street kid?' in the Mafia sense.

Always looking for victims or heroin.

Coming to a town near you. He often spoke about, 'If you stick a knife into their kidney's they do not get a chance to scream as it stuns them.'

Remember that time they had to run a magazine article telling people Peter Dutton was not an actual monster?
